E-waste is serious because...

It's the law

The Pennsylvania Covered Devices Recycling Act (CDRA) states that electronics such as televisions, computers, and tablets — and computer accessories such as keyboards and laptops — are prohibited from landfills or incinerators and must be recycled at approved facilities.

It can be deadly

Electronics waste, or “e-waste,” contains toxic materials including:

- lead (neurotoxin)
- cadmium and beryllium (carcinogens)
- brominated flame retardants (endocrine disruptor)
- mercury (neurotoxin and nephrotoxin)

If electronics are not recycled properly, toxins can leach into groundwater or be released into the air. Certification assures these potentially hazardous products aren't sent overseas where substandard conditions may lead to greater negative environmental and health impacts.
